

EDITION 91 - FOOD INSECURITY

CALL FOR SUBMISSIONS

BCPHR would like to announce a call for submissions for a thematic edition addressing Food Insecurity, which refers to an inability to acquire adequate and nutritious food.

This edition seeks to highlight the multifaceted factors shaping the problem, such as: economic inequality, climate change, the design of food systems, and systemic barriers to food availability, including how they may manifest in both high and low-income countries.

We welcome submissions including, but not limited to, the following topics:

- The impact of climate change on agricultural productivity
- Food deserts and food waste
- Supply chain distribution and the design of food systems
- Community-based food systems and sustainable farming practices
- Effects of conflict and population displacement on food availability
- Developmental effects of food insecurity on children and youth
- The paradox of malnutrition and obesity
- Corporate responsibility in the marketing of healthy foods, resource distribution, and food affordability
- International aid/food assistance in developing countries

Learn more and submit online at:
<https://bcphr.org/submit-manuscripts-scholastica/>